Fedorov A. Statistical data on the attendance of Soviet films: 1950-1990.
Moscow: SM "Information for All", 2023. 64 p.

This edition presents the attendance statistics of the Soviet feature films, shown at the cinemas from 1950 till 1990.

Unfortunately the box office data is not available for all the Soviet feature films (and there were over seven thousand of them). There are, for example, serious gaps in the box office data from the 1920s to the 1960s. Therefore, this publication provides information on the number of viewers who watched Soviet feature films (more than three thousand titles in all) during the 12 months of screening from 1950 to 1990.

This book is intended for researchers in the field of cinema and media, film critics and historians, journalists, higher school teachers, students, graduate students, as well as for the range of readers who are interested in cinema statistics and sociology.

Introduction

This book provides attendance statistics for Soviet feature-length feature films screened in the USSR between 1950 and 1990.

Unfortunately, distribution data is not available for all Soviet feature-length fiction films (and there were over seven thousand of them) (there are, for example, serious gaps in the distribution data from the 1920s to the 1960s). Therefore, this reference publication provides information on the number of viewers who have seen Soviet feature films in the 12 months of screening from 1950 to 1990.

For a long time the attendance figures for many Soviet films were inaccessible for the mass audience and were contained mainly in the brochures of the State Cinema Committee (Goskino), which were published in minimum editions and had the stamp "For Official Use Only" (the complete list of the sources used is given by me in the section at the end of this list).

For many years I was collecting data on film statistics, but only in 2022, thanks to the help of Professor Alexander Kubyshkin, Professor Sergei Korkonosenko, film critic Evgeny Nefedov, Angelina Rogalskaya and RGALI, was able to access the film statistics of the USSR Goskino 1960s-1980s, which significantly influenced additions and changes in the figures contained in my books on Soviet cinematography, published earlier.

The data obtained allowed me to correct a number of errors and typos that were contained in a number of publications of previous years by various authors.

Of the several thousand feature-length films made in the USSR between 1950 and 1990, only those that managed to break the 15 million audience barrier during their first year in cinemas made it into the first thousand most popular films. And this is taking into account the fact that many of the statistics on Soviet films of the 1950s-1960s are still inaccessible. I believe that the real "threshold" of entry into the first thousand most popular films with complete film statistics would have been higher: perhaps 18-20 million viewers for the first year of screening.

Thus, I am quoting the most complete (available) attendance statistics for Soviet feature-length feature films screened in the USSR from 1950 to 1990.

In total, the list of Soviet feature films, which gathered in the Soviet film distribution from 1950 to 1990, from a few hundred thousand to 87.6 million viewers in the first year of screening in cinemas, included more than three thousand titles.

These new data were also included in the third edition of my book, "One thousand and one of the cashiest soviet film: opinions of film critics and viewers" (Moscow, 2023. 1270 p. <https://ifap.ru/library/book615.pdf>), where readers can also find data on film attendance (alas, far from complete) for Soviet feature films of the 1920s and 1940s.

The statistics show that the dynamics of film attendance for Soviet and foreign films per capita in the USSR (indicating the number of visits to cinemas per year) looked like this (Tab. 1): 15,1 (1957), 17,0 (1960), 17,9 (1963), 18,7 (1965), 19,0 (1966), 19,8 (1968), 19,4 (1970), 18,4 (1972), 17,5 (1976), 15,5 (1983), 13,5 (1987), 12,0 (1991).

At the same time, "the average attendance of one Soviet feature film per theatrical year during the period of the highest spectator activity of the USSR population was: 1962 - 12.0 million viewers, 1965 - 13.2 million, 1969 - 15.8 million, 1973 - 11.7 million" (Zhabsky, 2012).

This publication is intended for film and media researchers, film historians and critics, film scholars, journalists, high school teachers, undergraduate and graduate students, as well as for the range of readers who are interested in film statistics and film sociology.

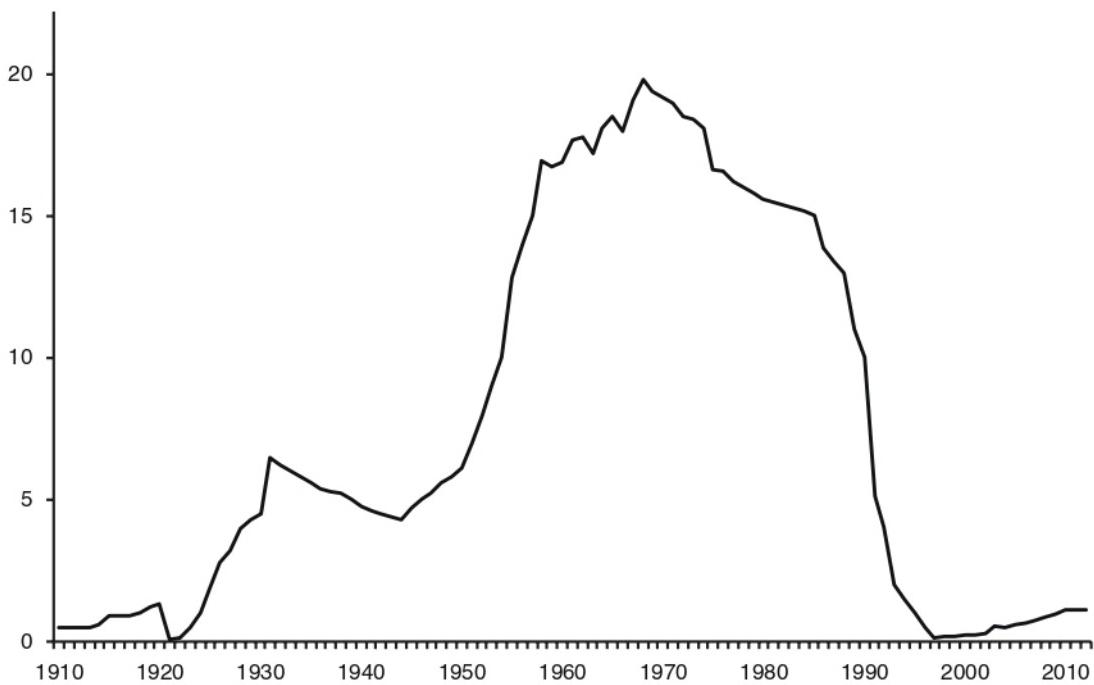

Figure 1. Cinema attendance, USSR-Russia market (1910-2012). Number of visits per inhabitant per year (source: Berezin, O.S. Great cycles and conjuncture of the cinema exhibition market. St. Petersburg, 2014: 47).

Indeed, the decrease in Soviet film attendance in the second half of the 1980s had taken a "chronic form, and it could not have come to this. After all, Soviet cinema had a connection with the audience. Here are, say, the box office leaders of 1980: Pirates of the 20th Century - 87.6 million viewers, Moscow Does Not Believe in Tears - 84.5 million viewers per episode, The Crew - 71.1 million per episode. And that's without counting attendance in subsequent years. With the average ticket price of 24 kopecks and the average production price of 450 thousand rubles per episode of the income from each of these films exceeded the costs more than thirty-five times!!! The share of spectacular pictures began to decline in 1986. At that time under 5 million viewers collected 55.6 percent of pictures, in 1987 - already 62.9 percent, in 1988 - 75.9 percent, in 1989 - 86.3 percent in 1990 according to incomplete data - 95 percent. The box office outsiders turned into an aggressive majority" (Furikov, 1998).

* These figures differ somewhat depending on the source of information, but the trend toward a steady increase in the number of TV sets per 100 Soviet families remains unchanged.

Statistical data on a thousand of the most popular Soviet feature-length films screened in the USSR from 1950 to 1990

The sequence of data in the list: place in the rating, the number of millions of viewers during the first year of screening (on average per episode, if there were several), the film's title, studio, and director(s). At the same time, the lists usually indicate not the year of production of a particular film, but the main year of its mass distribution.

Where a film was distributed in the Soviet Union with a considerable delay (which had happened mostly in two cases: (1) the movie was shelved for censorship reasons and was eventually shown onscreen with a long time lag; (2) a TV version of the film was released several years after its successful TV premiere) this is also noted.

As for the films of the USSR republics that were originally shot in a language other than Russian, their way to the wide screen (due to dubbing) usually took one and a half to two years, and this publication specifies exactly the main year of all-Union distribution of these films.

Statistical data on Soviet feature-length films screened in the USSR from 1950 to 1990, but not included in the top thousand most popular films

The sequence of data in the list: the number of millions of viewers during the first year of screening (on average per episode, if there were several), the film's title, the film studio, the director(s). At the same time, the lists, as a rule, do not indicate the year of production of a particular film, but the main year of its mass distribution.

Where a film was distributed in the Soviet Union with a considerable delay (which had happened mostly in two cases: (1) the picture was shelved for censorship reasons and was eventually shown onscreen with a long time lag; (2) a TV version of the film was released several years after its successful TV premiere) this is also noted.

As for the films from the republics of the USSR that were originally filmed in a language other than Russian, their way to the wide screen (due to dubbing) usually took a year and a half or two years, and this publication indicates the main year of all-Union distribution of these films.

All in all this list of Soviet feature films that made 15.5 million viewers or less during their first year in the Soviet Union box office between 1950 and 1990 includes more than two thousand titles.
